

Legacy Giving

Make a Difference and Touch the Future

Legacy giving is a type of charitable donation that allows you to integrate family, financial and charitable goals at the end of life.

Including the Auburn Interfaith Food Closet (AIFC) in your estate plan is a simple, yet powerful, way to invest in the future of this important organization and the Auburn community.

When you make a planned gift—of any size—you help strengthen AIFC's mission to provide nutritious food to individuals and families who do not have sufficient resources to purchase it themselves. In a real sense, you will be touching the future.

The AIFC suggests you have an attorney, financial planner or CPA review all bequest or beneficiary documents to ensure the instructions clearly state your intentions.

Leave a Lasting Legacy

Anyone can make a donation to the Auburn Interfaith Food Closet, as a bequest through their will or trust. This allows AIFC to support areas important to you and provide an unrestricted gift that will be applied to the organization's most urgent needs. Restricted gifts are welcome, too.

Bequests may be given as, but not limited to:

- A specific dollar amount
- A percentage of an estate
